ABSTRACT

This annotated bibliographic collection of resources on Africa including non-fiction, fiction, texts, poetry, draft papers, addresses, periodicals, film, records, and travel agencies is designed to aid secondary students and their teachers interested in research on Africa. An instructional approach is taken, drawing upon examples to demonstrate the wide range of sources from which one may select topics. The included resources are compiled in a listing of 128 topics. Page numbers of chapters, indexes, subjects, addresses, and telephone numbers, if available, are included. The main body of this bibliography lists a geographical area or general subject, identified by a number. Dates of publication, authors, titles of work, places of publication, periodical titles, volumes, numbers, annotations, and quotations complete the entries. Titles have been written in sentence format for clear interpretation of work. Quotations have been included for illustration of style. Page numbers have been included for ready referencing. (DB)

This bibliography is a collection of resources -- non-fiction, fiction, texts, poetry, draft papers, addresses, periodicals, film, records, travel agencies -- a collection which hopefully starts a trail of interest and research into Africana.

The central thrust of this volume is the secondary student and teacher of Africa. The approach is instructional and draws upon examples to demonstrate the wide range of sources from which one may wish to select topics, as well as, the importance of developing one's own bibliographical collection.

If considered for publication, I require no compensation. This work is offered in my desire to increase the student's interest in Africa.

INTRODUCTION

No attempt has been made to critique each bibliographic entry. Annotations have been reproduced or edited during each examination. Since this author's intention is to enable the user of the bibliography a speedy and direct access to Africa information, page numbers of chapters, indexes, subjects, addresses, telephone numbers, etc. which relate to Africa sources are included.

The main body of this bibliography lists a geographical area or general subject, indentified by a number. Dates of publication, authors, titles of work, places of publication, periodical titles, volumes, numbers, annotations, and quotations complete the entries. Titles have been written in sentence format for clear interpretation of work. Quotations have been included for illustration of style. Page numbers have been included for ready referencing.

This bibliography is intended as a guide to literature published and to persons involved in all aspects of cultural interdependence regarding the continent of Africa. . .a guide which will lead the reader from an individual entry to supportive authors and writings, leading the student on a continuing path toward knowledge about Africa.

Examples are largely drawn from Dr. Ayisi's own Ghanaian culture.

8 : ARCHITECTURE

1969. Kultermann, U. New directions in African architecture. New York: George Braziller.

"The character of the African is based upon dynamics which are wholly fulfilled in the present rather than in striving to create eternal values. For the African, life itself, the immediate self, and the moment are important. This explains the fundamental differences of tradition and of the surviving architectural monuments. Cultures whose monuments are built of perishable materials imply the concept of perishability; they are much more open to the forces and methods of tradition than cultures which strive to create monuments for eternity, and must live with building constructed from relatively indestructible materials." (p. 12)

Contains photographs of contemporary schools, homes, and buildings.

Example:

"Just a Passerby" Oswald Mbuyiseni Mtshali

I saw them clobber him with kieries,
I heard him scream with pain
like a victim of slaughter;
I smelt fresh blood gush
from his nostrils,
and flow on the street.

I walked into the church,
and knelt in the pew
"Lord! I love you,
I also love my neighbour. Amen."

I came out
my heart as light as an angel's kiss
on the cheek of a saintly soul.

Back home I strutted
past a crowd of onlookers.
Then she came in --
my woman neighbour:
"Have you heard? They've killed your brother."
"O! No! I heard nothing, I've been to church." (p. 317-18)

The following are excerpts from the lecture, which was offered as a prelude to the airing of the series,"The Africans", on PBS-US television:

The series is an interpretation of inside Africa, explaining Africa today, examining Traditional, Islamic, and Western influences.

The Islamic population of Nigeria today is larger than any Arab country.

Indigenous religions have moderated Islam/Christian conflicts. For example: Muslim Senegal elected a Catholic president long before the US acceptance of Catholic President John Kennedy.

African problems include: the "curse" of the ancestors: ancestors were not consulted regarding the artificial acculturation resulting from colonialism; the "winter" gap: because of the tropical climate in Africa, there resulted retarded technological advance, in that, tropicality results in simplicity, i.e., modest textiles, modest housing; American blacks: these blacks must recapture Africanity and enter Americanity to influence African policy, just as Jewish-Americans have influenced US Mid-eastern policy; economics: the marriages of military and economics has not worked when one examines the military governments of African countries; there is too much reliance on dessert and beverage economies (cocoa, fruit); language: there is a need for education to take place in indigenous languages, for example, Swahili is spoken by 50 million Africans and its usage is growing.
